POWER, POLITICS AND LAW: DYNAMICS OF CONSTITUTIONAL CHANGE IN KENYA, 1897-2022

Githu Muigai, with Dan Juma

The literature on constitutional development in Africa has increased markedly in quantity, yet an interrogation of the forces that drive these changes has not been sufficiently made. What explains this neglect despite the outburst of constitutional reforms? This book analyses how constitutional outcomes in post-colonial Kenya originate from everyday political struggles. The objective is not to emphasise the primacy of politics but to illuminate simultaneously the societal-based forms of power and the constraints these exert on constitutional politics. By retelling historical chains of events, from the establishment of company government in Kenya in 1897 to the most recent attempts at constitutional change in 2022, this book demonstrates that though powerholders hardly yield to social demand for constitutional reordering, social pressures have asserted their deterministic influence on constitutional change processes.

DECENTRALISATION AND INCLUSION IN KENYA: FROM PRECOLONIAL TIMES TO THE FIRST DECADE OF DEVOLUTION

J Osogo Ambani and Caroline Kioko (eds)

This comprehensive book presents the findings of a year-long study conducted by Kabarak University Law School and Heinrich Boll Stiftung, Nairobi Office, examining the impact of the first decade of devolution on the inclusion of marginalised groups in Kenyan governance structures. Exploring the interplay between decentralisation and inclusion, the volume highlights the historical struggles and shifts in power dynamics. With insights derived from rigorous analysis and scholarly contributions, this edited collection critically evaluates whether devolution has fulfilled its promise of democratisation and inclusion. Essential for scholars, policymakers, and practitioners, this book contributes to the discourse on transformative governance, offering reflections on the challenges and prospects of achieving genuine decentralisation and inclusive governance in Kenya and beyond.

MENTAL HEALTH AND THE CRIMINAL JUSTICE SYSTEM

J Osogo Ambani and Humphrey Sipalla (eds)

This book offers enlightening insights into the evolution of criminal justice laws concerning persons with intellectual and psychosocial disabilities, commencing with the M'Naghten rules, and examines their impact in the criminal justice system. The authors scrutinise the mechanisms established in the criminal law policy and legal frameworks that relate to mental health rights, as well as the practices, policies, and laws governing the treatment of persons with intellectual and psychosocial disabilities in the criminal justice system from their arrest to sentencing. Further, the book critically analyses emerging jurisprudence by the Kenyan courts and conducts an African comparative jurisprudence from select countries.

JUDICIAL FINANCIAL INDEPENDENCE IN AFRICA: A STUDY OF ELEVEN SUB-SAHARAN COUNTRIES

Conrad Bosire (ed)

Many African countries grapple with a legacy of colonial rule and authoritarian regimes, where the judiciary often remains subservient to the executive. This creates a complex landscape where safeguarding judicial independence is an ongoing struggle. This book explores the critical topic of judicial financial independence, a cornerstone of judicial autonomy and a critical element of a fair legal system.

This publication offers valuable insights on the current state and recent developments of judicial financial independence in eleven African countries. It presents unique comparative data on budget allocations for the judiciary, analysing its concrete impact on institutional and individual decision-making autonomy. Based on this analysis, concrete suggestions aimed at enhancing judicial financial independence are provided. The publication serves as a guide to policymakers, legal practitioners, advocates, and stakeholders committed to a strong and independent judiciary.

ANTI-COUNTERFEIT AND INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY LAW AND POLICY – DISCUSSION PAPER SERIES (2024) DPS1/2024

The importance of intellectual property in fostering innovation, creativity and economic growth cannot be overstated. Emerging and disruptive technologies have become increasingly important as these are used, both as tools to infringe, as well as enforce and protect intellectual property.

The Anti-Counterfeit Authority (ACA) a unique law enforcement authority in Kenya, continues to bring together regulators, law enforcement agencies, brand protection experts, intellectual property scholars, brand owners, lawyers, judges, prosecutors and students to share knowledge, insights, exchange experiences, and review merging practices on intellectual property.

The Discussion Paper Series is an output of a series of these debates, discussions and expositions hosted by ACA. It is a timely contribution to the intellectual property protection and enforcement discourse and knowledge in the Global South.

RECLAIMING AFRICA'S DEVELOPMENT NARRATIVE

Caroline Kioko and Jite Phido (eds)

This book is a compilation of essays that discuss the decolonisation of development funding in Africa. The essays in this book explore the link between power asymmetries and the current development funding framework. This book also discusses how the current development funding model affects the self-determination and sovereignty of African countries and how current funding models foster financial dependence. The essays in this book also propose alternatives that position African communities as active participants in the philanthropic process, rather than passive recipients of aid. This book further advocates for the reclaiming of African philanthropy through African philanthropic practices such as Harambee and Osusu.

IN SEARCH AND DEFENCE OF RADICAL LEGAL EDUCATION: A PERSONAL FOOTNOTE

Willy Mutunga

This is the inaugural issue of the Kabarak Law School Occasional Paper Series, featuring the inaugural lecture by Professor Justice Willy Mutunga. In this publication Professor Mutunga interrogates the intricacies of what he calls a radical legal education, questioning the very foundations of legal education and asserting a clear transformative mission for law teachers, an argument woven in a captivating personal narrative, rooted in his life journey from his childhood village to his tenure as Chief Justice of Kenya and President of the Supreme Court of Kenya. Professor Justice Mutunga masterfully navigates the complex interplay between law, society, and culture, offering profound insights into past events and their enduring implications for the future. With meticulous attention to jurisprudential trends at risk of fading from memory, this compelling discourse revives forgotten knowledge and reignites intellectual debates in the realm of legal education. This is a fitting opener to the Kabarak Law School Occasional Paper Series, which intends at showcasing scholarly production in comprehensive monographic treatments of precise legal inquiries.
